

Social Housing (Regulation) Bill

4 November 2022

Briefing for second reading in House of Commons

The Social Housing \(Regulation\) Bill has completed its passage through the House of Lords, and will have its second reading in the House of Commons on 7 November. This briefing provides an overview of CIH's thoughts on the bill and some proposed amendments (as currently drafted).

Summary

- CIH welcomes the Bill's focus on the key objectives of safety, transparency and accountability of landlords to tenants in social housing, as set out in the Charter for social housing residents: social housing white paper. It is important that the robust measures set out in the bill in supporting those aims are maintained through to the final act, including the requirement to report on the progress of cladding removal and other remediation relating to fire and building safety.
- The Regulator for social housing (the Regulator) will gather performance information on landlords that will be useful to tenants, including tenant satisfaction through a perception survey. We believe this should also be used proactively by landlords in engaging with tenants, and more should be done to ensure this is accessible and useful to tenants, including, where necessary, performance improvement plans. This will require a consistently applied collection methodology to provide assurance to both Regulator and tenants that the information provided is transparent and comparable - a stated aim of the Tenant Satisfaction Measures. As the Regulator has recently confirmed its preferred approach, we would support the review of the outcomes from the tenant perception survey in terms of robustness for transparency and comparability within a year of the Act coming into force and / or as part of the review of the consumer standard.
- CIH welcomes measures to ensure that the bill set explicit requirements for regular inspections as well as additional emergency/ short notice inspections and actions where needed. This was the clear expectation of the government's white paper.
- A named health and safety lead will be required in every registered provider, and resources provided to ensure they can fulfil their functions of advice to boards. There are also proposals to set out how the Regulator might require social landlords to demonstrate the appropriate competencies and conduct of housing management professionals. CIH welcomes the focus on this in light of the review of professionalism, and the acknowledgement of the importance of skilled staff in the government's green and white papers. CIH's work with See the Person (now Stop Social Housing Stigma) also identified the qualities, knowledge, and skills of staff at all levels within housing organisations as significant in appropriate engagement with tenants and addressing stigma.

- CIH recognises the huge level of housing need, including the growing need for more housing of the most affordable (social) rent. We welcome that this has been identified in an amendment that proposes the secretary of state should report on the sufficiency of social housing provision at least every three years and provide recommendations to ensure sufficiency of supply.

Comment on key elements of the Bill

Proactive regulation and enforcement

The Bill provides a strong legislative framework to ensure that the tenant and landlord relationship is strengthened, with increased accountability to tenants backed by a proactive consumer standard and powers for the Regulator. We believe that this provides a robust mechanism to drive improved standards across registered providers, that will encourage the sector as a whole to look at and learn from the many organisations that are working well with their tenants to deliver good homes, neighbourhoods and services.

We are keen to see that the measures in the bill that support this strong, proactive approach to the consumer standard and accountability to residents are carried through to the final Act.

Setting high expectations

The bill ensures that the Regulator can require applicants to be registered to demonstrate that they will meet regulatory requirements from the outset, and that failure to meet standards is added to reasons for mandatory de-registration. CIH has called for standards that apply across the board for tenants whatever the landlord type, so we are pleased to see a broader application of the standards and tools to tackle poor performance across non/ for profit, and local authority housing.

Housing management

We welcomed the government's review of professionalism in the sector, and look forward to its recommendations. CIH supports the intention for the Bill to enable the secretary of state and Regulator to ensure that housing management staff, and those with regular contact and involvement with residents should display required levels of competency, skills and experience to provide a good service to residents. We appreciate that housing providers are complex businesses that require very diverse skills across the organisation, but in relation to direct housing management functions, including resident involvement and anti-social behaviour work, there is a case for setting certain expectations of skills, knowledge and behaviour to ensure that staff provide good services and work well with and in response to residents. We look forward to working with government, the Regulator and the sector in taking this forward.

Housing conditions

Given the impact of rising energy costs and in order to deliver on the government's ambitions for net zero carbon, we think it would be appropriate for regular reporting on progress to be part of the Regulator's expectations and monitoring framework; energy efficiency is fundamental to providing a decent home for residents.

Inspections

We support measures to enable the Regulator to step in quickly, where there is reason to believe through failure to comply, failure to act or other error, that there may be risk to tenants' health and safety. This is encompassed in the removal of the serious detriment test and the power to undertake a survey with 48 hours' notice rather than 28 days, plus the power to order repairs, where necessary. This provides important powers to enact in an emergency; however, CIH supports the amendment that would also set out a requirement on the Regulator to undertake periodic and regular inspections. This was set out in the government's social housing white paper The charter for social housing residents, which proposed inspections of the larger landlords every four years; it will be an important step for tenants and residents to be assured of the ongoing performance of their landlord, and provide an opportunity to identify and address areas of poorer or weaker performance, including through the Regulator's own experience of good practice in other similar organisations.

It is vital that the Regulator is well resourced to undertake wider inspections on a regular basis, underpinned and informed by the body of evidence that will come from proactive monitoring of the consumer standards and regular reporting on the Tenant Satisfaction Measures, as well as from the investigations and reports of the Housing Ombudsman.

Information

The Regulator and Housing Ombudsman together are important partners in ensuring that registered providers deliver homes and services that are safe and of good quality, well managed and delivered with services that take account of the priorities of their tenants, through active tenant involvement.

Transparency and accessibility of performance information to the Regulator and to tenants, so that they can see how their landlord is performing, is a main aim of the social housing white paper, underpinned by powers in the bill for the Regulator to direct what information landlords must provide, when etc. It is important that this information on financial measures, performance and the Tenant Satisfaction Measures is easily available to tenants if they are to hold landlords to account. However, CIH has raised concerns about how the information is collected and published, given the diversity of the sector (see more in our consultation response where we raise concerns about certain aspects of how tenant perceptions will be gathered. As the Regulator has recently confirmed its preferred approach, we would support the review of the outcomes from the tenant perception survey in terms of robustness, transparency and comparability within a set period and / or as part of the review of the consumer standard, and would be keen to continue to work with the Regulator and sector on this.

We also argued that there is value in tracking how well a landlord improves on its own performance and response to tenants over time. Consideration should be given as to how tenants will be alerted should any poor performance lead to the Regulator requiring a performance improvement plan; the bill calls for landlords to provide a copy should a tenant require one, but a more proactive engagement with tenants on what this is, why it came about, and what they can expect for progress would be more in keeping with the aim of the white paper.

Housing supply

Evidence produced for the National Housing Federation and Crisis by Heriot Watt University in 2018 identified a need for 145,000 affordable homes per annum over the ten years 2021-31, of which 90,000 would be for social rent and the remainder for low-cost homeownership or intermediate renting. Although this assessment has not been fully updated, since then need is likely to have grown still further. However, current plans will start only 36,000 homes annually, and this target is now under threat because of higher interest rates, inflation in construction costs and proposed planning reform. The requirement for a regular review of progress on delivery, with recommendations on how to achieve what is needed, will enable the sector and government to focus on how best to achieve the housing numbers, and particularly the social rented housing, we need.

About CIH

The Chartered Institute of Housing (CIH) is the independent voice for housing and the home of professional standards. Our goal is simple - to provide housing professionals and their organisations with the advice, support, and knowledge they need. CIH is a registered charity and not-for-profit organisation. This means that the money we make is put back into the organisation and funds the activities we carry out to support the housing sector. We have a diverse membership of people who work in both the public and private sectors, in 20 countries on five continents across the world.
